Unhinged, descriptive content, over complicated details of characters and scenery. I am a Star Wars and Sci-Fi fan and have read many fan books that are better written than this. I don't really know what else to add, I'm just really disappointed. Plot summary[]
“Unfortunately, he taught his apprentice everything he knew, then his apprentice killed him in his sleep. Ironic. He could save others from death, but not himself.” —Palpatine to Anakin Skywalker[3]
Prologue[]
The novel begins just after Darth Sidious kills his Sith Master, Darth Plagueis. The Sith Lord experiences a moment where he feels a dramatic shift in the Force, which promises him that the dark side shall control him as much as he controls it. Main novel[]
The book then cuts back 35 years, as Darth Plagueis and his Master, Darth Tenebrous, arrive on the world of Bal'demnic to examine its cortosis supply, which is being mined unbeknownst to either the Republic or the Jedi Order. Tenebrous plans to take advantage of the cortosis' natural resistance to lightsaber blades for his future attempts to overthrow the Jedi and replace the Republic with an empire ruled by the Sith. During the examination, the mining probe droid begins digging at a pocket of explosive lethane next to a cortosis deposit against orders, leading Tenebrous and Plagueis to rush back to their ship and escape the resulting explosion. Unfortunately, the explosion occurs before they make it back to their ship, but Tenebrous is able to use the Force to contain the explosion so it doesn't kill them, while Plagueis makes sure that their ship isn't destroyed by the impact of the blast. In the process, Tenebrous is severely weakened, and Plagueis finds himself with the opportunity to end his Master's life and take on the role of Sith Master. He uses the Force to hurl falling debris on top of his Master; then, attempting to make it look as though it was a natural event, he rushes to his master's side. However, he cannot resist revealing to Tenebrous what his true plans were, and what they meant for the future of the Sith. The Muun tells his Bith Master that he will put an end to the old order of the Rule of Two before breaking Tenebrous's neck and observing his dying body through the Force in an attempt to manipulate midi-chlorians. However, Tenebrous dies before Plagueis is even able to at least prolong his Master's life for the sake of his experimentation. Regardless, Plagueis makes it off of Bal'demnic by stowing away on the ship known as the Woebegone. After being discovered, he kills its crew and has the ship slagged, taking only the droid 11-4D as an assistant in his midi-chlorian experiments. Plagueis then returns to his homeworld of Muunilinst as Hego Damask, CEO of Damask Holdings, in time for a clandestine meeting with several leaders of various companies and cartels on Muunilinst's moon of Sojourn. He confronts the representatives of the Subtext Mining Corporation, which was the company that supplied the faulty probe droid that was the indirect cause of Tenebrous's death. He threatens their lives, and in response, they tell him of a lode of plasma located beneath the world of Naboo, which will prove profitable for Damask Holdings, the InterGalactic Banking Clan, and the galaxy at large. Plagueis spares their lives and has them relocated to the most remote world on the Tingel Arm so they would be in reserve in case he needs them again (he has them killed later on when it becomes clear that he cannot have any dealings with Maistara's Pax Teem, who is a supporter of Subtext). After the meetings on Sojourn, Plagueis is confronted by Darth Venamis, a Bith Sith who Tenebrous had been training in secret as a plan B for if Plagueis failed to live up to Tenebrous's expectations. Plagueis bests Venamis in combat, forcing him to swear allegiance to him before forcing the lesser Sith to poison himself. Plagueis then proceeds to use Venamis as part of his experiments in manipulating midi-chlorians, whose ultimate end is to defeat death and make himself immortal. In the meantime, Plagueis tracks down the other Force-users that Venamis had met in order to determine whether or not they pose a threat to his plans. He promptly identifies the Force-users who pose a threat to him - an Iktotch, a Shi'ido and a Nautolan - and eliminates them. In exchange for the plasma located beneath the surface of Naboo, Damask Holdings and the Trade Federation begin a bid to support Bon Tapalo as king of the planet. Tapalo will open Naboo to trade, particularly for the plasma, which will then allow it to get involved with the rest of the galaxy. Among the political allies Plagueis sees in particular is a young man named Palpatine, whose motivations and actions go against those of his father, Cosinga, who wants Naboo to remain an isolationist world. Seeing potential in Palpatine in terms of ambitions and even actual power in the Force, Plagueis begins using him as a source of information regarding the campaign of Tapalo and his opponents. Palpatine, meanwhile, sees in Hego Damask the father figure he never had, even as he knows that he is being manipulated. Naturally, this attracts Cosinga's attention, who tries to separate his son from Plagueis. In retaliation, Palpatine kills his entire family and their honor guard aboard their personal starship by using his full, unbridled power in the dark side of the Force. He later informs Plagueis of the deed, who then congratulates Palpatine on "emancipating" himself. Soon, Plagueis takes Palpatine under his wing as his Sith apprentice after revealing to the young man the nature of himself and of the Sith, promptly naming him Darth Sidious. In the eleven years that follow of Plagueis teaching Sidious the nature of the dark side and the ways of the Sith, Palpatine, as the last House Palpatine, climbs his way up the political ladder of Naboo to become its ambassador throughout the galaxy. And with the help of new friends like Kinman Doriana and Sate Pestage, Palpatine arranges for the successful assassination of his former mentor and Naboo's representative Senator to the Republic, Vidar Kim. As a result, Palpatine becomes the new Senator of Naboo, taking a seat in the Republic Senate as Plagueis continues his plans of manipulating midi-chlorians to prolong his own life indefinitely. One such plan involves the cloning industry on the backwater world of Kamino, inadvertently setting the stage for the eventual Clone Wars. Meanwhile, amidst his own political machinations, Palpatine, in his urge to know more about the dark side than what Plagueis teaches him, manages to make a visit to the world of Dathomir, where he encounters a Dathomirian woman who gives him a Zabrak infant simply known as Maul. Plagueis later has Maul sent to Mustafar, where he could be nurtured at his young age in the dark side of the Force. As Sidious and Plagueis promptly proceed to eliminate their political opponents, Plagueis is attacked during an Order of the Canted Circle ceremony for his assistant Larsh Hill by Maladian assassins. Hill and the other members of the Order of the Canted Circle are killed, but Plagueis, albeit severely wounded, is able to fight off and kill several of the assassins before Palpatine and Sate Pestage arrive to assist the superior Sith Lord. Palpatine had previously discerned that a powerful political opponent of his, Pax Teem, had outwitted Plagueis and had sent the assassins to kill him and his partners during the Canted Circle ceremony. In retaliation, Palpatine personally attacks Teem during a celebratory feast, killing him and all of his guests, leaving no survivors or evidence. In the aftermath of the attack at the botched ceremony, as Plagueis is forced to wear a respirator to survive, he becomes more alert than ever about his surroundings, even going so far as forever renouncing sleep, and is even more obsessed with finding a way to live forever. As Damask, he trains Hill's son, San, to become the new head of the InterGalactic Banking Clan. Meanwhile, even though Plagueis managed to kill and then resurrect Darth Venamis in one of his experiments, he finds that he cannot do it again after Venamis dies for good. More than two decades pass as Palpatine gains more power in the Senate as the reign of Supreme Chancellor Finis Valorum comes to an end. The rest of the novel tells the events depicted in other, preexisting Star Wars stories, such as Jedi Council: Acts of War, Cloak of Deception, Star Wars: Darth Maul, and Darth Maul: Shadow Hunter, until the novel takes place during the entirety of Star Wars: Episode I The Phantom Menace. Throughout these events, it is learned that Plagueis had killed former King Ars Veruna of Naboo (thus, allowing Palpatine to take as a teenaged Padmé Amidala elected as the planet's Queen) and that Plagueis also suggested to Sifo-Dyas to sanction a human clone army on Kamino. Palpatine, who had also named Maul Darth behind Plagueis's back, also sees a potential ally in the former Jedi Count Dooku. As the novel comes to a close during the events of The Phantom Menace, Sidious and Plagueis learn that a young boy named Anakin Skywalker, a former slave found by Qui-Gon Jinn on Tatoine, had been born of the Force. They discern that this is most likely due to Plagueis's experiment of creating life through the Force, which he had commenced about a decade earlier. The novel climaxes where it began—as the Battle of Naboo occurs, Palpatine coerces Plagueis into sleep with the promise of making him co-chancellor of the Republic, just as Plagueis demanded decades earlier, now that Palpatine appears to be winning in the election to replace Finis Valorum as Chancellor. With that, Sidious attacks Plagueis and, as he kills him, he explains that he was the one who had really been manipulating Plagueis the whole time, with such deals as the clone army as an example. In the end, Sidious ends Plagueis's life with the dark side of the Force, although his feeling of triumph is ruined as he feels uneasy for some reason. He later attributes this to the supposed death of Darth Maul, though, as he initially suspected, it may very well have been Plagueis himself reaching out to him from beyond the Force. As Palpatine is officially made Supreme Chancellor of the Republic, he begins to commence his solo plans of taking over the galaxy with the upcoming Clone Wars, such as seeking Dooku as a placeholder Sith apprentice and ally in the war. But the biggest part in Darth Sidious's plan is young Anakin Skywalker, now a Padawan to Obi-Wan Kenobi, who the Sith sees will be easily manipulated into becoming his true apprentice, and a harbinger of Palpatine's own power. Plagueis' death[]
“Let’s go over the second part of the speech, shall we. You useless old fool. It was Hego Damask as Darth Plagueis who came to Naboo, determined to suck the planet dry of plasma and set the Trade Federation up as its overseers. It was Hego Damask as Plagueis who then set his sights on a seemingly confused young man and, with meticulous skill, manipulated him into committing patricide, matricide, fratricide. Darth Plagueis who took him as an apprentice, sharing some of his knowledge but withholding his most powerful secrets, denying the apprentice his wishes as a means of controlling him, instilling in him a sense of murderous rage, and turning him to the dark side. Sidious stood to his full height, glaring. It was Plagueis who criticized the early efforts of his apprentice, and who once choked him in a demonstration of his superiority. Plagueis, who denigrated him in private for hiring an inept assassin to carry out the murder of Senator Kim—and yet who allowed himself to be tricked by the Gran and nearly killed by mercenaries. Plagueis, who turned away from the Grand Plan to focus entirely on himself, in an egotistical quest for immortality.” —Sidious on Plagueis.[src]
Plagueis gave the Sun Guards the night off, leaving him, Sidious, and 11-4D alone. As the Sith Lords removed their cloaks, OneOne-FourDee served them Sullustan wine into expensive glassware. Plagueis remarked on the age of the wine and proposed a toast in honor of the culmination of decades of planning and execution, and to the new meaning, they would “give” the Rule of Two. Both beings drained their glasses, which were immediately refilled by 11-4D. Sidious complemented Plagueis on his part of the plan and told him he would endeavor to live up to Plagueis’ expectations and fulfill his responsibility. Sidious then began the speech he would give tomorrow—following Damask’s request—he began by saying that the Republic had been intact for a millennia thanks to larger invisible beings whose accomplishments needed to be brought to the light of day. Plagueis stated that he was pleased and Sidious continued. He stated that Hego Damask was one of those beings, the being who had overseen the development of the Republic Reserve Administration and who provided financial support for the Resettlement Acts that enabled beings to colonize distant worlds. He continued by saying that Hego Damask was who transformed the Trade Federation, however, Damask interrupted him and told him that it wasn’t the right time to mention a controversial organization. Plagueis told him to take a different approach, and so he did. As the night wore on, Sidious continued to amend and improvise, touching on Damask’s childhood on Mygeeto and on the elder Damask’s contributions to the InterGalactic Banking Clan during his term as co-chair. As he continued, the droid brought a third, and then the fourth bottle of wine. Plagueis, now pleasantly intoxicated, only wanted to sleep and dream of his march into the Senate Rotunda, the looks of surprise, astonishment on the faces of the gathered senators. Plagueis tried to end the drinking, however, Sidious didn’t let him, he turned Plagueis’ own words against him. Their glasses were filled again, and Plagueis’ eyelids began to flicker and close... Plagueis went asleep, and Sidious was going to leave—but the dark side wouldn’t let him—the dark side told Sidious that his victory was assured and that the Sun Guards were absent... Plagueis unsuspecting and asleep. Sidious turned back and threw a web of force lightning into Plagueis’ breathing device. Plagueis woke up, alarmed, his breath going away. The Force began to gather in Plagueis like a storm. Plagueis had survived assassinations, and killed countless opponents didn’t fight back, he merely gazed at his apprentice, until he noticed that he was being challenged! Plagueis was confident that he had achieved immortality and stood absolutely still, he denied that he was slowly suffocating, Sidious stopped, and stood absolutely still. Plagueis gazed back at him. The question lingered for only a moment, then Sidious unleashed another tangle of lightning, drawing more deeply on the dark side than he ever had. Palpatine then repeated the “second part of the speech” calling Plagueis a fool. He then described everything Plagueis had done since his arrival at Naboo, drying the planet dry of plasma, set the Trade Federation as overseers, the one who set his sights on a seemingly confused youg man and, with meticulous skill, manipulated the man into committing patricide, matricide and fratricide. Plagueis who took him as apprentice, sharing some of his knowledge but withholding his most powerful secrets, denying the apprentice his wishes. As Tenebrous had once done, Plagueis who made his apprentice hire an inept assassin to murder Senator Vidar Kim—and yet, who had allowed himself to be tricked by a Grand and nearly killed. Plagueis, turned away from the Grand Plan to focus entirely on himself, in a quest for immortality. Plagueis tried to stand up, but fell onto the couch. The lightning resumed, and shortly, Plagueis was gathering his midi-chlorians. Palpatine told him that his midi-chlorians couldn’t do anything if he was being denied breathing, that his studies would be useful to safe him, and that he could save him, however, he stated that he would do no such thing. Just as Plagueis fell onto the couch, dead, the Force going away from him, Palpatine sensed a great disturbance in the Force. He asked himself if Plagueis had achieved immortality, or that the disturbance was Plagueis’ death. However, he realized it was neither of those, Palpatine realized Maul had died. Although he really didn’t. Palpatine felt a tremor taking hold of the planet, and he also sensed himself staying in the middle of it, a chorus of voices praised his assassination and the birth of a new order, he quickly dismissed the voices and focused on himself. Palpatine breathed heavily, and looked around the room, witnessing paintings, tapestries, carpets, and a lot of broken furniture, as well as Plagueis’ corpse, the dark lord was lying on a couch, dead, however, Sidious thought that perhaps his master had achieved immortality, which he later dismissed. He also thought about Damask’s egotism, he asked himself if Plagueis had centered so much on his goal that he had forgotten about his own safety. Sidious rolled Plagueis’ corpse over to showcase the Muun’s back, in that angle, Plagueis looked like he did when he met Palpatine for the first time. His fears were dismissed as Sidious witnessed the Muun’s featured relaxing and dying. Palpatine decided that the will of the dark side had been done, and therefore, turned to the window of Plagueis’ suite. Palpatine thought that the 2 of them had changed the galaxy for trillions of beings, that with the birth of Darth Sidious, it had already changed. Sidious observed the planets and stars, aligned in different configurations long before both of them had been born, however, they had changed. Palpatine sensed something rising from him, confident that the dark side was his, he decided that the something inside him—a monster—would soon be liberated. He later thought about Plagueis’ master’s death, Plagueis had never talked about his death. Sidious asked himself if the same thing that happened to Plagueis happened to Tenebrous. He then once again looked at the window and left. Development[]
“In dealing with Plagueis’ quest for immortality, I originally structured part of the book as a kind of race between him and Qui-Gon Jinn, they inadvertently sabotaged one another without either of them realizing they were pursuing the same goal. In the end, Qui-Gon succeeded by making contact with the Whills- the mysterious species of immortals George Lucas mentioned in an epigraph for the first Star Wars novel. As a result, the first version of the Plagueis novel was all over the place, way too long, and trying too hard to resolve every loose end.” —James Lucreo[src]
A Darth Plagueis novel was scheduled to be written by James Lucreo and released in October 2008 by Del Rey about Darth Plagueis and his backstory. In an interview with Star Wars Insider magazine, Lucreo said that he would like to write a future novel dealing with the search for immortality that both Qui-Gon Jinn and Darth Plagueis embarked upon in their own separate ways. However, in a talk show interview in February 5, 2007,[4] he indicated that the novel was currently on hold due to issues surrounding the revelation of Palpatine's backstory and Expanded Universe continuity concerns. Cancellation[]
“I'm sure you've noticed that the Plagueis novel is not listed. It's true. The novel has been cancelled. We decided that this was not the right time to delve into Palpatine's backstory and Plagueis's beginnings. You'll still see Jim Lucreo around, though, as he's an author we are not willing to lose.” —Sue Rostoni[src]
On March 27, 2007, Sue Rostoni revealed in her blog that the novel had been canceled, in an entry revealing an updated publishing schedule.[5] The announcements for the novel stated that Plagueis was a Muun. Leland Chee has confirmed that, since Plagueis's species did not originate in the novel, it is still considered his canonical species by Lucas Licensing.[6] The novel was replaced with Darth Bane: Rule of Two[7] however, Lucreo had said he still hoped he could convince the powers that be at LucasFilm to let him write the novel, and cited sales of Millennium Falcon could help influence that.[8] Rejuvenation[]
“Plagueis was born into an historical setting that allowed him to bring many important beings under his influence, and to bring the re-emergent dark side fully to the attention of the Jedi Order.” —James Lucreo[src]
On July 27, 2010, Sue Rostoni stated that the book was back on schedule, with a release date of February 28, 2012. This announcement came following a sales database leak, which the fan site New Jedi Order Encyclopedia published. Believing it to be a replacement for the canceled Imperial Commando 2, fans asked for clarification. Rostoni confirmed that the book was going to be published in 2012, but that it is not intended to replace Imperial Commando 2. The release date was later changed to December 27, 2011, and then again to January 10, 2012. On August 22, 2011, it was announced on the Star Wars Books Facebook page that Matthew Stover would be writing a short story, entitled The Tenebrous Way, that ties into the book. It was published in the Star Wars Insider 130 on December 13, 2011. Original outline and inspiration[]
Darth Plagueis was first set to be a first-person narrative. Sidious would have found Plagueis's holocron shortly after he murdered his master and it would have retold Plagueis's recorded life story. Ann Rice's The Vampire Chronicles served as inspiration for the storyline.[2] Continuity[]
“Prince Xixor and Sise Fromm will inherit the dregs.” —Darth Plagueis[src]
On page 407 of the paperback edition of Darth Plagueis, “Xixor” is misspelled as “Xixor.” The novel's back cover was later used in the Canon Emperor Palpatine issue of the Star Wars Encyclopedia by De Agostini.[9] Media[]
